

beautiful city in Orange County. We're inviting more people to travel in for healing retreats and spa experiences at our wellness center — a sanctuary where deep, soul-level transformation happens. The results are life-changing, and we know those who come leave forever shifted. 2025 is all about expanding our divine assignment — with more ease, more grace, and a global reach.

Del Wayne:
Where do you see your company in 5 years?

ANGELA KUNG:

In five years, I see Angela Kung Acupuncture & Wellness Center as a globally recognized sanctuary — a destination people from all over the world seek out for deep, lasting, soul-level healing. I see us booked out, bustling with life, love, and purpose, to the point where we're expanding into a larger facility — one with an ocean view, designed to reflect the serenity and beauty of the healing we offer inside. I see the entire operation flowing effortlessly, orchestrated by divine alignment, and supported by a powerful team operating in excellence. I'll look around and be in awe — humbled that something so impactful, so expansive, and so sacred was entrusted to me. It won't just be a wellness center. It will be a movement. A miracle hub. A global light for those seeking true healing.

Del Wayne:
What is considered as growth for you in business?

ANGELA KUNG:

While growth is often measured in financial profit or expansion through franchising, I define growth as impact — touching more lives, spreading more light, and awakening more people to the truth of real, holistic healing. Yes, profit matters — a thriving business must be financially sound. And I do see the financial side of my business growing abundantly. But that growth is simply a reflection of something deeper: that our services are deeply needed, that more people are being helped, and that our mission is resonating. To me, true growth means our team expands with purpose, our systems evolve with grace, and I'm able to inspire more people through speaking on larger stages — reaching hearts, not just ears. It means I'm living in alignment with my soul's calling, and others are rising because of it. Growth is not just about numbers. It's about meaning. And when purpose and impact lead, the rest will always follow.

Del Wayne:
What have you learned new about yourself this year so far?

ANGELA KUNG:

This year, I've learned that the higher you climb in life, the more grounded you must become to sustain it. Like a towering tree, your visible success can only flourish when your roots run deep — rooted in humility, strength, and truth. Without that grounding, even the most glamorous fruit can rot. But when you do the inner work no one sees, you unlock the kind of success that's not just impressive — it's sustainable, sacred, and soul-aligned. I've learned that I'm far more resilient, powerful, and gifted than I ever realized. I laugh in the face of fear. My ability to trust God and have unshakable faith has made me into a woman I could never become on my own. My relationship with God is the most important thing in my life — the foundation that everything else is built on. I've also learned that what I thought I had missed out on — dreams I thought were no longer possible — are being resurrected. God is the God of miracles, and He's showing me that not only is it not too late, but something even better is coming. I hear Him saying, "I'm not done with you yet. Just wait — I'm about to blow your mind." I've learned that true breakthroughs often hide in the very things we avoid. That humility is a superpower. That I am still becoming, still dreaming, still expanding — like a child again, full of excitement and wonder. I've discovered a level of creativity and talent within me I hadn't fully tapped into before, and now that I'm flowing in freedom, it's all pouring out — the ideas, the brilliance, the joy. I've realized that everything I want is just a thought, a belief, and a surrender away. And with God leading the way, I truly can become anything I'm called to be.

Del Wayne:
How have you used social media to bring in more business effectively?

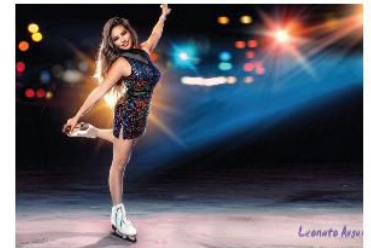

ANGELA KUNG:

To be honest, I'm just now getting serious about using social media strategically — but even before that, it's already been a powerful tool simply by sharing my truth. I've always focused on showing up authentically: sharing wisdom, heart-centered messages, healing insights, and behind-the-scenes moments from my wellness center and events. Winning the title of Mrs. Asia USA definitely brought more attention to my platforms, and I've leaned into that visibility by hosting live videos, teaching masterclasses, and inviting people into the deeper work I offer. I've found that people resonate most when they feel your energy is real — when they sense that you actually care and have something meaningful to share. Now, with the launch of my new course on the horizon, I'm stepping into a much more intentional season with social media. I see it as a divine tool — not just for growing a business, but for reaching more people who are ready for true healing. So while the best is yet to come, even in its most organic form, social media has already helped me begin attracting aligned clients and creating real connections. Stay tuned... this is only the beginning.

Del Wayne:
What are some of the most effective marketing tools you use to bring in new clients? Besides social media.

ANGELA KUNG:

Honestly, the most powerful marketing tool I've ever used is doing exceptional work — creating such profound results that clients can't help but refer everyone they know. Word of mouth has been the foundation of my business since day one. When people experience true healing, they naturally become your biggest advocates. But I also believe that marketing follows energy. If you're confident in what you offer, deeply aligned with your purpose, and hold your frequency high — people feel that. It's like energetic marketing. It becomes a "build it and they will come" situation — because what you radiate is what you attract. I trust that when I stay in integrity, lead with love, and show up in service, the right clients find me. Whether it's through a conversation, a speaking event, or simply the ripple effect of one transformed life — aligned energy is the ultimate magnet.

Del Wayne:
Which entrepreneurs are you most inspired by?

ANGELA KUNG:

Honestly, because I didn't come from a traditional business mindset, I wasn't initially drawn to entrepreneurs for inspiration. My focus was always on healing — both myself and others — so I gravitated toward those who were masters of their craft, not necessarily building empires. That said, my mindset has shifted in recent years. As my business has expanded, I've become
